Largest Animal in the World.

What is claimed as the largest animal in the world is represented by a colossal skeleton in the museum of Christ church in New Zealand. This is the remains of a large specimen of the blue whale stranded on the coast of that country. This whale is probably the largest of all living animals. The length of the skeleton is 87 feet and the head alone is 21 feet long. The weight of the bones is estimated at nine tons. This gigantic whale gets its name of blue whale from the dark bluish grey of its upper surface. The tinge of yellow on its lower part has led to the name "sulphur bottom," by which it is known on the western side of the Atlantic. It is otherwise known as Sibbald's orca (Balaenoptera Sibbaldi).

The chief food of this gigantic animal is a small marine crustacean (thysanopoda incerta) known to the whalers as "krill." Another species of the same shrimp-like group has been obtained in thousands from the stomachs of mackerel caught on the Cornish coast. The nearly related opossum shrimp found in enormous numbers in the Greenland seas form the chief food of the common whale. Some of the thysanopoda are phosphorescent and contribute to the luminosity of the sea.—London Globe.

"The Law of Aerial Navigation," a brief article by Lillian Fox in the July number of The North American Review, undertakes to anticipate the possibilities of legal complications ensuing from the traffic in the newly acquired domain—the air. The Government, according to Mr. Fox, will be compelled to condemn the air above a certain height as a public highway. He adds:

"The project of condemning the air, while in a sense novel, would be perfectly feasible from a legal standpoint. There is apparently no question as to the power to establish such a highway. Moreover, it would possess the rare virtue of involving little or no expense. Granting that the air stratum condemned should be as high as a height as not to interfere with the most ambitious building operations, six cents would seem to be full remuneration for the property taken from any individual owner for public purposes. The simple European expedient of declaring the air to be a highway, by statute, without exercise of eminent domain, would hardly seem practicable in this country, as constituting a taking of property without due compensation, unless the courts hold, as suggested that the air is already a public highway above the height of effective possession."

ABOUT THE STATE

Attention having been called to the statement of Brown & Holden of Enosburgh Falls that they have herds grass growing four feet and 11 inches in length, E. S. Johnson of Morrisville is showing a field of clover in which are stalks of red clover four feet, six inches and one-half inches long with a good thick bottom.

The two-year-old child of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Fortune of East Montpelier, was killed Saturday afternoon by falling down stairs. Mrs. Fortune had rocked the child to sleep and laid him on a bed upstairs. The baby awoke, wandered to the head of the stairs, fell to the bottom and when picked up was dead.

TRIPPLE SHOOTING.

Rejected Suitor Wounds Two Women and Kills Himself.

Merrill, Wis., July 14.—O. W. Englehorn of Bavaria, Wis., a well-to-do bachelor, drove late yesterday afternoon to the farm of August Kasten, who lives about four miles from this city—a distance of about twenty miles. After having dinner with the family, Finkleston shot and probably fatally wounded Anna Kasten, a 19-year-old divorcee, with whom he was infatuated and who had refused to marry him. He then opened fire on the young woman's mother, firing two shots, one of which hit her in the hand, the other going wild. He next walked out into the yard and reloaded the revolver, returning to the house to survey the scene. Standing in the doorway he placed the weapon to his own head, with the muzzle in his right ear and pulled the trigger twice, falling dead in his tracks. A 9-year-old boy, who had witnessed the shooting, ran four miles to the nearest telephone to notify the authorities.

A statement found in the murderer's pocket, giving an account of his property and the address of his relatives, showed that the dead had been premeditated. Ten unfired cartridges also were found.

The Confession of a Rebellious Wife.

A remarkable human document under the above title appears in the July American Magazine. In it a woman makes frank confessions of the unhappiness of her married life. She writes:

"For the next five years we went through the most dreadful agonies with our child. He was delicate and the usual number of children's diseases he took hard. Worst of all, he had to undergo a terrible operation. Our doctor casually told us that the boy would be better off in the mountain air. I believed that home was the best place for him. But Frank overruled me. Then followed fifteen months in the country, fifteen months of miserable isolation. Each Saturday Frank would come up and stay till Monday. Meanwhile I nearly perished. At times it seemed as if my soul died. I tried to divert myself with music and with reading. Perhaps I read too much. I know I thought far too much to good for me."

"I can fancy readers of these words, women, too, saying: 'What an unnatural mother. Didn't she have any love for her child?' Yes I loved my child so passionately that the fear of the pain he suffered and the dread of more sickness with possible death, used to drive me almost frantic. But the child was not enough to fill my life. As an intelligent woman I longed for companionship and for understanding. Even in the visits of my husband I had little satisfaction. His pleasure in the fine way in which the doctor's advice was working out used to exasperate me. He told me that business often kept him down town till midnight. So, it was really a convenience, having me in the country. I knew just how his evening work was done, over dinner-tables at clubs, in clouds of tobacco smoke and among luxurious appointments, while I sat in the mountains, reading by a lamp alone."

Perhaps I ought to have accepted my task in a finer spirit. A better woman might have been more patient. Many women would have been glad to sacrifice themselves for the sake of a child. But I was still a civilized woman with a mind and a nature clamoring for interests and occupation that a child could not supply. I believe, too, that my being something besides a mother, made me a better mother. I could have borne my exile with more cheerfulness if I had felt that Frank ever understood how hard it was for me and if I had believed that he, too, would have made as hard a sacrifice for our little boy. He occasionally reminded me that he was working for me and for our boy. He wasn't. He would have worked just as hard if he had been a bachelor. He worked because he loved it. He loved making other people do as he wished and most of all, because he enjoyed being important. I could have loved him more if he had made some sacrifice of success, which meant himself, for the sake of our happiness together. Most of all, I could have loved him if he had been a failure married to failure, to men who had to lean on them and be sustained by them."

"A permanent Tariff and Efficient Revenue System" is the title of a timely article by Colonel Willard French, in the July number of The North American Review, in which he explains those views on the tariff that were embodied in President Taft's recent message to Congress. He observes:

"These various fortune hunting tax theories which have been propounded as props to the present system, have generally carried an effort, for one reason or another, to exempt small fortunes from the tax; necessitating an inquiry into the tax collector into the private affairs of every citizen, for proof that his entire income did not reach four or five thousand dollars. With the proposed system the same end, if desirable, can be reached without inquiry, without an enormous expense to the Government and the national temptation to fraud, by the simple provision that any one holding securities subject to tax, has but to prove, as an individual and at his own volition, that his entire income was less than the sum fixed, in order to receive from the Government a rebate of the amount of the corporation paid on his individual holding."

WORSE THAN SUPPOSED.

Magazine on Ship Came Near Exploding in Fire.

Naples, July 13.—Yesterday's gas explosion on the cruiser North Carolina in Santa Lucia harbor developed today to be worse than supposed. Despite the efforts of the officers to minimize it it is known that Ensign Hugh Aiken of New Orleans was killed and Engineer Makalou so seriously injured that he will lose both eyes. It is now learned that after the explosion in the coal bins a fire started, which nearly reached the magazine and only boatloads of marines from the other ships prevented an explosion which would have wrecked the ship.

Railway Accidents.

Railway accident bulletin No. 31, recently issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission, gives the number of persons killed in railway accidents during the months of January, February and March, 1909, as 177. The number of persons injured in train accidents was 2,618. These reports deal only with employees on duty and passengers. The number of passengers killed, exclusive of postal clerks, express messengers, etc., were sixty-nine, but only twenty-eight of these were killed in train accidents. Of the remaining forty-one, twenty-eight deaths were occasioned by falling from the cars while getting on and off, and the remaining thirteen were due to other causes not specified. The total number of passengers and employees killed on the railways was 685, as compared with 798 in the last quarter of 1908.

There were 1,042 collisions and 1,242 derailments in the quarter now under review, of which 168 collisions and 145 derailments affected passenger trains. The greatest loss of life in any one accident during the quarter occurred in the collision on the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad on Jan. 15, when twenty persons were killed. This accident is attributed to the misunderstanding of a train order.—Engineering News.

A Night Rider's Raid.

The worst night raiders are calomel, croton oil or aloes pills. They raid your body to rob you of rest. Not so with Dr. King's New Life Pills. They never disarrange the system, but always cleanse the system, curing colic, constipation, malaria, etc., at the Red Cross Pharmacy.
